Advocacy

We advocate for parents in two ways depending on what you want.

Passive support - We sit beside you at meetings to do with your child while you argue your case. This can include advising you how to make representations at review meetings with governing body disciplinary committees (GBDC), independent review panels (IRPs), or writing letters to local authorities. Sometimes all parents need is someone by their side not to be their voice.

Active support - We speak on your behalf at meetings to do with your child. We seek to persuade and influence outcomes for your child using the law and or practical solutions. This includes representing your
